RICK O'SHAY

A. It's fun to look at the dark
spots on the moon and imagine
that they look like
eyes and a nose and mouth. What we see
as dark spots on the moon are really great,
dark-colored plains.
The biggest one is
about 750 miles
across. The moon's rugged surface is covered with mountains, craters,
and large, flat lava plains called "seas." At full moon, the entire visible surface shines with reflected sunlight. The mountainous areas on the moon are made of a much lighter
colored rock than the lava plains. They reflect more sunlight, and appear as the white areas on the moon.
